Dear Chrysler 300M Enthusiasts Club,

Sarah Wade knows how to “walk through the valley of the shadow of death.” She learned how after an insurgent’s homemade bomb ripped apart her husband’s body in Iraq.

The IED’s blast tore off Ted Wade’s arm. It broke his leg. Worst of all, the injury to Ted’s brain was extreme.

Ted was in a coma for three months. The doctors felt sure he’d die. Then, they told Sarah that Ted would never walk or talk again.

Sarah battled to see that Ted got every chance to live. At the side of the man she loves, Sarah suffered. She struggled and fought hard for the best treatment and therapy available.

Sarah made many sacrifices herself. She left college to become Ted’s caregiver and make sure Ted received the care and treatment he needed. After four hard years, the fight for Ted’s recovery still goes on. But amazing things have happened thanks to your ongoing support of the Wounded Warrior Project...Ted’s courage...and Sarah’s resolve.

Ted’s not only walking and talking. He’s not only taking part in Wounded Warrior Project athletic events, thanks to the gifts you send from Nevada. He’s right there setting the example, showing other heroes how to regain their freedom after they suffered terrible wounds in defense of your freedom and mine!

The enclosed certificate honors all you do to make extraordinary stories like this happen in the lives of combat-injured troops.

But you and I and the Wounded Warrior Project cannot stop now!

Will you respond to freedom’s wounded defenders with your gift of $500...or $700...or even $800...today?

Heroes requiring immediate help are filling up the hospitals! The need is pressing!

(Over, please)

Injured troops must get the full range of WWP services you'll find described at woundedwarriorproject.org.

And remember Sarah! The families need our attention, too! When one of our troops is injured, a whole family becomes a casualty. Look behind the smiles on their faces and think about this:

The war in Iraq will never end for Ted and Sarah Wade.

Ted's arm will be gone forever. He'll always work hard to cope with his injuries. And through everything the future brings, Sarah will stand at Ted's side. Her attitude is fantastic, but she knows this won't be easy.

It's incredible, watching Sarah. If Ted inspires other wounded troops, Sarah sets the hearts of their families on fire! Through the Wounded Warrior Project, you help Sarah carry the torch for brain injured veterans and their families!

You help Sarah bear a message of hope not only to the veterans and their loved ones, but to America's leaders. Though Sarah will remind you that much remains to be done, she has become a leader in making traumatic brain injury an issue of prominence.

As I send your Certificate of Appreciation, Sarah asks me to thank you for helping her assist so many wounded troops and their families.

While I share Sarah's appreciation, let me ask you to do a few things to support Wounded Warrior Project's mission. Please sign the enclosed thank-you card, returning it with your gift today. With several patriotic holidays in the weeks and months ahead, please fly your American flag...and use those occasions to thank veterans you know.

Also, thank men and women in uniform whenever you see them. Your kind gesture will mean a great deal to them. You might even consider volunteer work at a military or veterans' medical facility. There are many roles to play, and you will make a difference.

Let me state that I'm proud of you...and grateful! You stand with me and Sarah at the sides of great American heroes like Ted Wade.

Right now, think about what Ted fought and sacrificed for our country, what Sarah fought and sacrificed for our country, and what you can do in return for such great sacrifices. Please send the most generous gift you can to the Wounded Warrior Project.

Honoring Your Loyalty!

John Melia, Executive Director

P.S. Like the loyalty you show through the Wounded Warrior Project, your certificate has meaning. And your continued devotion, expressed through another gift today, is urgently important. As the story of Ted and Sarah Wade shows, the need goes on!
